CONFERENCE TO ADD TO THE GOOD NEWS FOR RURAL HEALTH

Chair of the National Rural Health Alliance, Dr Jenny May, said figures released on Friday by the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) reveal some good and bad news about rural health and highlight the particular intransigence of the health challenge in remote areas.

According to the report, Health and community services labour force 2006, Australia's health workforce increased by 23 per cent between 2001 and 2006 - but this is countered by the bad news that there was a fall in supply in very remote areas. The remote health workforce decreased by 346 workers per 100,000 people. Nation-wide, in 2006 there were 2,649 health workers for every 100,000 people, compared with only 1,379 per 100,000 in very remote areas.

friends Photography and Poetry Competition and friends Unsung Hero Award

In conjunction with the 10th National Rural Health Conference, friends of the Alliance is holding an amateur photography and poetry competition to highlight life in rural and remote Australia. friends are invited to enter by submitting entries about rural people at work or play; capturing the unique feel of life in rural/remote Australia; vibrant rural communities; the advantages of living outside a capital city; description of the beauty and reality of life in rural/remote Australia; healthy rural lifestyles; or any rural or remote theme. First prize in each category will be $500. Further information and an entry form is available at
There are many people who work tirelessly for their rural or remote communities and contribute greatly on issues about which they are passionate. Rural and remote communities are much richer for their contribution, yet we often don't know who they are. They might be the quiet achiever, the volunteer, or the worker who constantly goes above and beyond their normal role to contribute to their community. The purpose of the friends Unsung Hero Award is to recognise these grassroots people who have made a significant contribution to the health of their remote, Indigenous or rural community. Nominations close 17 April 2009. Further information and an entry form are available at http://nrha.ruralhealth.org.au/friends/docs/uha2009/uha_entry_form_2009.pdf

10th NATIONAL RURAL HEALTH CONFERENCE 17-20 May 2009, Cairns, Qld

The 10th biennial National Rural Health Conference, to be held at the Cairns Convention Centre from 17-20 May, will seek to identify how people living in rural and remote areas are coping with the threats and opportunities they face. It will highlight both the serious challenges those people face and their resilience at a time when ecological issues remain serious and when the fiscal and financial environment has changed beyond recognition.

Promoting Cairns as "The Place to Be" the organisers have been under pressure to fit into the program the many threads, topics and research reports which this biennial event brings together. The result is a program rich in content and variety that is now accessible at http://www.ruralhealth.org.au

The packed program will feature 18 keynote addresses from leaders in the health sector, as well as researchers and political identities. About 120 of more than 350 papers submitted for consideration will be delivered in concurrent sessions, interspersed with eight lengthier participatory workshops. Workshop topics include the role of the health sector in mitigating the effects of climate change; setting an Australian rural ethics agenda; and drought, drying and rural mental health. There will be a strong arts-in-health stream, with the North Queensland organisation Arts Nexus curating events.

The previous two biennial conferences each attracted more than 1,000 delegates and the organisers, led by the NRHA, are expecting similar registration numbers. "It's good to have the Conference back in Queensland after 18 years away and even better to have it in North Queensland - the first time in the tropics," said Atherton-based physiotherapist and conference convenor, Owen Allen. "We'll roll out a warm welcome and then get down to the serious business of making sure that the political change underway in the health sector provides some of the answers we've been looking for in rural and remote areas," Mr Allen said.

POLICY NEWS

Culture and wellbeing: the case of Indigenous Australians
A recurring theme in the debate surrounding Indigenous affairs in Australia is a tension between maintenance of Indigenous culture and the achievement of 'equity' in socioeconomic outcomes: essentially 'self-determination' versus 'assimilation'. Implicit in this tension is the view that attachment to traditional culture and lifestyles is a hindrance to the achievement of 'mainstream' economic goals. This paper argues the need for a renewed focus on the wellbeing of Indigenous Australians, and for empirical evidence on the link between culture and socio-economic wellbeing instead of ideological debate.

What job, which house? Simple solutions to complex problems in Indigenous affairs
In a recent paper, former Keating government minister Gary Johns advocates a 'no job, no house' policy for remote Indigenous communities. Johns' proposal is the latest in a line of offerings from conservative politicians and commentators on Aboriginal affairs. What arguments and evidence support such proposals? What do they say about the state of Indigenous politics in Australia? Will they work?

International Group for Indigenous Health Measurement 2006
Significant health disparities exist between indigenous and non-indigenous populations in Australia, Canada, New Zealand and the United States. But how can policy makers reduce these disparities if high-quality data isn't available? The International Group for Indigenous Health Measurement is committed to the highest quality collection, dissemination, and use of data related to indigenous health. The second meeting of the Group was held in Canberra, November 2006. In this publication you will find the proceedings of that meeting including abstracts and biographies and also information on how these different countries identify, collect and count data on their indigenous populations.

CAUSES OF DEATH, 2007
(ABS Cat 3303.0)

In 2007, there were 137,854 deaths registered in Australia, approximately 4,000 (3.1%) more than the number registered in 2006 (133,739). The standardised death rate (SDR) in 2007 (6.0 deaths per 1,000 standard population) was the same as in 2005 and 2006, which was the lowest on record.

In 2007, Ischaemic heart disease, defined as ICD-10 codes I20-I25, was the leading underlying cause of death in Australia. Ischaemic heart disease includes angina, blocked arteries (heart) and heart attacks, both new and old. It was the underlying cause of 16% of all registered deaths in Australia. It accounted for 17% of all male deaths, and 16% of all female deaths registered in 2007.

There were 2,421 deaths registered across Australia in 2007 where the deceased person was identified as being of Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander origin, or both (Indigenous).

Australian Association of Gerontology (NSW Division) Rural Conference
1st & 2nd April 2009
Broken Hill Entertainment Centre, Broken Hill NSW

Come to Silver City, Broken Hill in Far West NSW, where the "outback comes alive" for a unique and exciting conference on ageing. The theme for the conference is 'Ageing in a Changing Environment' and reflects on the implications of a changing world on an ageing population, and how we respond to these changes to meet the challenges and opportunities that they bring. Set in Broken Hill, the conference also invites a perspective on ageing and aged care from the outback heart of Australia and will give rare insight into the innovative and clever ways that people are meeting and beating the challenges of providing care in rural and remote settings. The conference will inspire practitioners, researchers and academics to rethink what ageing means in a changing environment.

Cancer Council NSW will be conducting a Consumer Research Forum on Thursday 14th May 2009. The Forum will be held from 8:30am to 12noon in a Sydney CBD location. The aim of the forum is to identify an agreed set of NSW cancer consumer research priorities across the cancer control spectrum (from prevention through survivorship and bereavement). Involving consumers in research priority setting has been shown to support funding agencies to reconcile the different needs and agendas of researchers and the wider community, and to result in more balanced funding of pragmatic (research that directly addresses a relevant patient or health system need) and explanatory research.

Healing Our Spirit 2010 - Call for Abstracts

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health workers and researchers are advised to start planning now for Healing Our Spirit Worldwide The Sixth Gathering, which is due to take place on the island of Honolulu in Hawaii from 3 to 10 September 2010. The goal of Healing Our Spirit Worldwide (HOSW) is to celebrate the diverse and unique cultural strengths, knowledge and talents of Indigenous peoples around the world, with a particular focus on successes, best practices and common issues in health, healing and addictions.

The Cooperative Research Centre for Aboriginal Health is a proud supporter of and committed participant in the gathering, which will be hosted by native Hawaiian healthcare organisation Papa Ola Lôkahi (www.papaolalokahi.org).

Event organisers are now accepting abstracts, presentations and proposals for the sharing of cultural practices and performing arts. These need to be submitted by 8 September 2009 via the link on the home page of the HOSW website (http://www.hosw.com).

Chair of the National Rural Health Alliance, Dr Jenny May, said figures released on Friday by the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) reveal some good and bad news about rural health and highlight the particular intransigence of the health challenge in remote areas.

According to the report, Health and community services labour force 2006, Australia’s health workforce increased by 23 per cent between 2001 and 2006 - but this is countered by the bad news that there was a fall in supply in very remote areas. The remote health workforce decreased by 346 workers per 100,000 people. Nation-wide, in 2006 there were 2,649 health workers for every 100,000 people, compared with only 1,379 per 100,000 in very remote areas.

Conversely, very remote areas experienced a rise in the rate of community services workers (a category including child and youth service, family services and aged and/or disabled care workers, as well as child care and welfare centre managers).

"People living and providing health services in remote parts of Australia will not be surprised by these findings, but it is a very serious matter that those people whose health status is poorest are falling even further behind where the health workforce is concerned," Dr May said.

The report provides mixed news with regard to the Indigenous health workforce. Despite a 45 per cent increase between 2001 and 2006 in the number of Indigenous health workers (doctors, nurses, allied health professionals, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers), they are still only 1 per cent of the total health workforce. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people comprise 2.5 per cent of Australia's population.

"Recruiting and retaining health professionals in rural areas is an ongoing challenge that will be addressed at the 10th National Rural Health Conference in Cairns in May this year," Dr May said.

"Lessons will be drawn from studies in South Australia, Victoria and Tasmania regarding the impact of identity, culture and lifestage on personal decision-making for health professionals, and the influence of an individual's experience of community and environments. There will be a focus on the allied health professions - for whom data and evidence are particularly scarce. There will also be success stories of localised solutions to rural workforce shortages that have been achieved through active engagement between professional, educational and rural communities."

10th Conference will focus on improved cancer services

Solutions to the widespread unaffordability and unavailability of cancer services in rural and remote areas are high on the agenda for the 10th National Rural Health Conference to be held in Cairns from 17-20 May.
"It's been a long standing concern that rural women may choose to have a mastectomy, rather than radiotherapy, because of the associated impositions of travelling long distances and lengthy absences from home," said Dr Jenny May, Chair of the National Rural Health Alliance which is organising the event.

"Decisions best made on the basis of medical indications and a person's individual health needs often have to be made in response to personal costs, accessibility of services, the care needs of children and other family members and the difficulty of periodically replacing oneself in the workplace," Dr May said.

Because of its significant impact on the lives of rural people, concurrent streams at the Cairns conference will be devoted to papers dealing with the challenges of cancer in rural areas with speakers from the Clinical Oncological Society of Australia (COSA) and the Medical Oncology Group of Australia (MOGA).

Dr Adam Boyce will look at the future of regional and remote cancer service delivery; Professor Patsy Yates will examine a care co-ordination project; Prof David Goldstein will present the results from a survey on burnout in cancer health professionals; and Dr Sabe Sabesan will present novel ways to enhance rural access to medical oncological services. In addition, COSA/MOGA will present two panel sessions and Associate Professor Bogda Koczwara will facilitate a workshop on the Education Program in Cancer Care (EPICC).

Other speakers will present a range of papers on cancer services. Bob Neumayer will report on the Cooma Oncology Unit Pilot Project which achieved improved rural service delivery through metropolitan partnerships. Stephen Margolis will discuss the Royal Flying Doctor Service's Primary Care Skin Cancer Clinic. Jane Phillips will profile CanNET, a new service model linking regional and metropolitan cancer services into single networks; and Leanne Brown will describe a dietetic service model for rural patients undergoing chemotherapy.

Cairns to host course in Blood Borne Viruses and STIs

A one-day course in Blood Borne Viruses and Sexually Transmitted Infections (BBV/STIs) will be held in Cairns ahead of the 10th National Rural Health Conference from 17-20 May.

This pre-Conference event is presented by the Australasian Society for HIV Medicine (ASHM) and aimed at healthcare workers who provide clinical services in the primary care setting and are in contact with patients who have, or are at risk of, BBVs and STIs.

The course on 17 May will provide an overview of the epidemiology, testing principles, pathogenesis, natural history and treatment of HIV, hepatitis B and C infections and common STIs. Taking sexual history and performing a sexual risk assessment will also be covered. The course has a regional and local focus, providing an overview of local service provision and referral pathways within the area. Information will be presented in a variety of formats, including interactive question and answer sessions, case discussions, facilitated small group work and short presentations.

ASHM is a key partner in the Australian response to HIV, hepatitis and related diseases. The Society works closely with government, advisory bodies, community agencies and other professional organisations to foster education for health professionals and the public through the provision of continuing education courses. The BBV/STI course has an important role to play in up-skilling all members of the primary care multidisciplinary team.

Application has been made for points for RACGP QA & CPD (Category 1), ACRRM and College of Nursing. For more information, please contact ASHM on (02) 8204 0700 or ashm@ashm.org.au.

The course will be held between 8.30am and 5 pm at The Sebel Cairns, 17 Abbott Street, at a cost of $80 for ASHM members ($100 for non-members). ASHM is pleased to be working with the NRHA on presentation of this special event.

Registration for the BBV/STI course and for the 10th National Rural Health Conference is available on-line at http://www.ruralhealth.org.au.

On-line, on-time and a boon for rural and remote areas

A new on-line resource to help rural and remote health professionals to diagnose and support people with Parkinson's disease has been launched less than 12 months after instigation of the project.

Dr Jenny May, Chair of the Alliance, congratulated those responsible for the development of the resource.

"Parkinson's Australia has done a wonderful job both to contribute $132,000 to the project and to lead so effectively the parties involved in it," Dr May said.

"This successful project has perhaps set a new benchmark in expedition, showing just what can be achieved quickly when all parties are focused on a common goal and can work together in an agreed fashion and with energy and commitment. It should inspire those of us working to secure project breakthroughs in other areas."

Key contributions were provided pro bono by Professor Martin Krause, Dr Simon Lewis and others with the support of a $90,000 Department of Health grant and backing from the Parliamentary Friends of Parkinson's. The on-line site has been developed by Brisbane-based company Medeserv-PrimEd.

The on-line educational and support program is available for use by all health professionals, with a focus on the particular needs of doctors and others in rural and remote areas.

In launching the program, Parliamentary Secretary Senator Jan McLucas said the program provides a complete overview of Parkinson's disease, and offers assistance with decision-making, advice about medications and the treatment of related factors such as depression, anxiety and lifestyle changes.

Senator McLucas acknowledged the special contribution of John Silk, Treasurer of Parkinson's Australia, and his wife Rebecca.

In rural and remote areas where health specialists are scarce, the need is to increase the general understanding of Parkinson's among whatever health professionals are available in order to improve ongoing quality of life for those with the condition. This new resource will go some way to meeting that need.

Alliance backs Business Council call for health system restructure

The peak body for rural and remote health has backed the call from the Business Council of Australia (BCA) for reform of the nation's fragmented national health services.

"The National Rural Health Alliance welcomes the BCA's contribution to the health debate and continues to call for improvements in the effectiveness and efficiency of the healthcare sector," said Chair of the NRHA, Dr Jenny May.

"We believe the changes are particularly crucial in rural and remote Australia which have poorer health outcomes and less than adequate primary and acute care services.

"Like so many others the Alliance is concerned at the rising incidence of chronic disease including cancer, heart disease, diabetes and mental illness. It is responsible for a significant burden of disease for individuals, communities and the national economy. It is costing billions of dollars every year, putting undue pressures on the acute care systems and on illness management at the expense of health promotion and early intervention."

The BCA estimates that if these factors are left unattended Australia's total health expenditure will double in the next 30 years - from 10 per cent of gross domestic product to around 20 per cent by 2040.

"We also agree that research efforts must be stepped up and that priorities in structural change include the need to overhaul current funding processes, with a single level of accountability to monitor and gauge health outcomes.

"Undue delays in establishing an e-health network are costing patients and fragmenting their care," Dr May said.

The Alliance continues to advocate the essentiality of a patient-centred system, focussed on health promotion, co-ordinated care of people with chronic illness and strong financing and accountability systems to promote health outcomes and quality of service.
