

AUSTRALIAN JOURNAL OF RURAL HEALTH

...good health and wellbeing in rural and remote Australia

The Australian Journal of Rural Health (AJRH) is Australia's premier multi-disciplinary academic journal on rural and remote health. It has an impact factor of 1.343 (ISI Web of Science). The AJRH is owned by the National Rural Health Alliance and is also the official journal of SARRAH and CRANaplus.

Aims and scope

AJRH provides high quality original research articles and other material (short reports, book reviews) focused on rural and remote health. The editorial policies of AJRH recognise and support the multi-disciplinary realities of health practice in non-metropolitan areas.

AJRH is published six times a year, both in hardcopy and online, by Wiley-Blackwell and is circulated to national and international subscribers. It is listed in global bibliographic databases including ISI Web of Science, Medline, and other major abstracting and indexing services.

Ownership and management

AJRH is owned and managed by the National Rural Health Alliance (NRHA). The Honorary Editor is Professor David Perkins, Professor of Rural Health Research, Centre for Rural and Remote Mental Health, University of Newcastle, based in Orange, NSW.

Reflecting its multi-disciplinary purpose and content, AJRH is supported by the Member Bodies of the NRHA, some of which choose to become Journal Associates.

Journal Associates have a representative on the Journal's Advisory Committee.

Currently the Journal Associates are Services for Australian Rural and Remote Allied Health (SARRAH) and CRANaplus (the professional body for all remote health).

For readers

- High quality articles that address the key issues in rural and remote health
- Free alerts whenever a new issue is published
- First issue of the year free
- Free access online to virtual issues
- Read full articles in print or online
- At-a-glance summaries of what each study adds to the literature

AJRH is an important publication vehicle for researchers and practitioners. The first issue of AJRH in each year is available free for online readers. Readers can keep up-to-date with the latest from AJRH by signing up for free emailed table of contents alerts. Visit Wiley Interscience to register: www.wiley.com

Since its inception in 1992, AJRH has contributed significantly to the publication of research reports and expert opinion on rural and remote health. Its subscribers include health practitioners from various professions, government departments, hospitals, administrators, universities, students, researchers, rural health units and libraries. It is heavily-used online in Australia and overseas.

AJRH regularly makes its research resources available free online through virtual issues themed around specific topics. Virtual issues are available on natural disasters, rural workforce research, mental health, and Indigenous health. In addition, readers also have free access to recent papers in the Journal's Top Cited and Top Downloaded lists.

For contributors

- ISI impact factor: 1.225
- Peer review
- Quick response times
- Help and advice for new or inexperienced contributors
- Large Australian readership
- Considerable international reach

AJRH welcomes original manuscripts and is focused on attracting the best authors to the journal and giving those authors an exemplary publishing experience. As well as manuscripts of full academic papers, AJRH welcomes shorter articles on matters related to rural and remote health, such as reviews, letters to the Editor, short reports, commentaries, personal stories, 'practice pointers', obituaries and proceedings of seminars and Conferences.

The submission of manuscripts is managed through the AJRH website. Articles for publication may be submitted via: <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/ajrh>

International reach

- In 2014 there were 158,000 full article downloads from AJRH through Wiley Interscience and other online hosts.
- Over 12,200 libraries worldwide have full access to the most recent content of AJRH, including those which receive the journal under Wiley-Blackwell's developing world philanthropic arrangements. (AJRH is accessible to institutions in developing countries free or at a greatly reduced price.)
- All journal abstracts are freely available online.

Inquiries about submitting manuscripts should be sent to Marta White at Wiley-Blackwell, via email at ajr.eo@wiley.com or phone +61 (03) 9274 3118

All peer review is managed online, ensuring quicker turnaround to final decision, and authors can track the progress of their manuscript through the peer review process. Once an article has been received into production, authors can continue to track its progress. Registered authors have free access to the full text of their papers in Wiley Online Library.

For Journal Associates

Individual health professionals who are members of Journal Associates receive annual subscriptions to AJRH as part of their membership entitlements in those organisations.

For the planet

AJRH and its publisher, Wiley-Blackwell, are committed to being Carbon Neutral. Wiley-Blackwell was the first global publisher to make a commitment to reducing its impact on the environment through the implementation of carbon offset projects to reduce the company's emissions to net zero.
